

Alliance of Women in Workers' Compensation Reopening Plan

We never imagined back in April when we shifted in-person events to virtual that we would still be in a similar situation in July. Various geographies of the country continue to have strict safety policies in place as coronavirus cases surge while others are experiencing a slowing and beginning to reopen. Businesses are in various stages of return to office planning and communities are partnering with the public health officials on gatherings.

The Alliance of Women in Workers' Compensation is closely monitoring each state and is committed to doing our part to flatten the curve. As we contemplate return to in-person events we will follow CDC guidelines in conjunction with state and local health officials. We will continue to assess conditions and determine whether to schedule, postpone, cancel, or limit attendees based the current situation. While we are anxious to offer events in-person, the safety and wellbeing of our followers and communities is the top priority.

In March the Alliance of Women in Workers' Compensation quickly shifted our events to include more webinars, virtual collaboration sessions, and social meetups to keep our followers engaged and learning. We appreciate the ongoing support of our sponsors and the leadership of our ambassadors; without you the Alliance be possible.
